

How Very Dare You?

09/06/19

HSP Observations

Small inconsiderate acts cause me to react very strongly. Seeing someone cut in line gives rise to astonishment, disbelief, anger, plans of public humiliation of the antisocial bastard, and dreams of a revolution of the kind and considerate. Outwardly, I, er, glare.

On Lush Bath Bombs

Lush smells great, is full of young, friendly customer servants, and is totes cruelty-free as well as environmentally conscious. What's not to like? Their bath bombs, that's what.

The point of a bath: relaxing, scented, relaxing, bubbly, relaxing, warm, relaxing.

The point of a bath for Lush: special effects.

Lush bath bombs sizzle and release a rainbow of colours and smell nice. It's all fun and I might even overlook the obvious lack of bubbles (although I'd much prefer bubbles, because it's a bath) if it weren't for one thing: Lush bath bombs are chock-full of colouring agents and glitter. When you step out of the bathtub, you're colouring-agent-and-glitter infested and need to shower far more thoroughly than after a fragrant bubble bath. Worse, your bathtub is now colouring-agent-and-glitter infested.

You know what I do not find relaxing? Scrubbing the bathtub. You know what I have to do after using a Lush bath bomb? Scrub the bathtub.

NO.

An Observation About Gardening

HSP Observations

I'm altogether too tender-hearted to garden proficiently. Surely caterpillars deserve to live too? Who am I to make decisions about which seedlings shall live and which shall be discarded? Is the weed not but an unloved flower?

On the toilet seat dilemma

Hear ye, hear ye. As this matter is still, inexplicably, a cause of much conflict and confusion, I will now solve it for yous.

Everyone lifts whatever they need to lift before doing their business. Everyone puts down everything put-downable before flushing, and leaves it down. There. Sorted.

An Observation About Pets

HSP Observations

Our office intern has, among other pets, a hedgehog. She bought some live cockroaches as a treat for the hedgehog, but found she couldn't bear to feed them to the hedgehog after all. The cockroaches now have names and a terrarium.

I totally get this.
